

STUDY COMPANION

Outline · Action Guide · Quick Reference

The Furious Method

Transform your mind, body, and goals.

BY

Tyson Fury

The Gypsy King · Heavyweight Champion of the World

"If I can come back from the brink, you can too."

The Furious Method

How this companion is laid out

Tyson Fury wrote The Furious Method as twelve rounds — the same twelve rounds he was conditioned to fight Deontay Wilder for the second time on 22 February 2020 at the MGM Grand Garden Arena. Each round is a chapter, and each chapter pairs a workout with a lesson. He calls them the building blocks of a comeback: transform your mind, body, and goals.

This companion organises those twelve rounds into a three-movement arc — the natural shape of a comeback story:

I • DOWN Rounds 1–2 — rock bottom and the choice to get back up.

II • BUILD Rounds 3–7 — goals, self-belief, your corner, your mind, your body.

III • BECOME Rounds 8–12 — weight, camp, distractions, alter ego, life after the bell.

Part I walks each round in order: opening quote, the stories Tyson tells to anchor it, the core lesson, and the four takeaways he emphasises.

Part II reorganises the same wisdom into an Action Guide of three phases — RECOVER, REBUILD, REIGN — so you can pick up the book at the moment you need it and find the next move.

The Quick Reference at the end is one principle per round, designed to print on a single page.

“If I can come back from the brink, you can too. So get back up, seek professional help, and let’s do this together as a team.” — Tyson Fury

MOVEMENT ONE

DOWN

The fall and the choice to get back up.

This is the canvas. Every fighter knows the floor. What you do in the next sixty seconds — admit, accept, decide — sets the rest of the bout.

Rounds 1–2

01 Getting Knocked Down

02 Getting Back Up

Getting Knocked Down

Hitting Rock Bottom

"If I can come back from the brink, you can too."

KEY MOMENTS

The red Ferrari at 160 mph. June 2016: Tyson is World Heavyweight Champion, miserable, hooked on cocaine and drink, weighing 28 stone. He aims his Ferrari at a motorway bridge until a voice — "think about your kids" — pulls him back from suicide.

The big empty. Within a month of beating Klitschko he was an emotional wreck on a diet of class-A drugs, fast food and alcohol. The Ferrari and millions in the bank meant nothing. He prayed for death daily.

The angel and the devil. Every day he heard one voice say he was good and another say the world would be better without him — and he didn't much believe in the angel. Drink masked the pain at night and made the mornings worse.

Ricky Hatton's confession. His friend, the two-time world champion, opened up publicly about depression — proof for Tyson that even champs hit the floor, and that talking about it is a strength, not a weakness.

THE LESSON

Anyone can get knocked down — even a heavyweight champion. The decision to admit it and reach for help is the first punch you throw on the way back.

FOUR TAKEAWAYS

1. Two lifelines exist at the bottom: hope and gratitude. Use them to start again.
2. Mental illness is not weakness — naming it is the start of beating it.
3. Don't betray today for tomorrow; happiness lives in the journey, not the destination.
4. Wear your heart on your sleeve. Telling the truth about your struggles smashes the stigma.

Getting Back Up

Building Resilience

“Resilience starts with believing you can cope with any situation, no matter how challenging it is.”

KEY MOMENTS

The Halloween skeleton. 2017, in a pub in a skin-tight skeleton outfit at 28 stone, Tyson catches sight of himself among people half his age, walks home, falls to his knees in his underpants and cries out to God for help.

The therapist's pastel walls. Sat in a comfy chair surrounded by photos of the psychiatrist's family, Tyson just talked — and felt the demon of depression loosen its grip for the first time.

From Morecambe to Style. December 2016: he packs the family into a caravan and moves onto his dad's land in Style, Cheshire, deliberately leaving the haunted theme park where his addictions had taken root.

The 90s mini coupe. Once you've crawled through the dirt, the Ferraris and Rolexes feel silly. Resilience is forged in the fire — and after that, you only own what actually serves you.

THE LESSON

Resilience isn't something you're born with. It's the habit of treating adversity as a teacher instead of a curse, and choosing to believe you can cope.

FOUR TAKEAWAYS

1. First, admit the problem. That's step one of every real recovery.
2. Change your environment — physical and digital — to a no-negative perimeter.
3. Build a corner of trusted people who can spot you slipping before you can.
4. Treat every storm survived as proof you can handle the next one.

MOVEMENT TWO

BUILD

The inner and outer foundations of a comeback.

Goal-setting, self-belief, the corner around you, the mind you train, the body you move. The five blocks every comeback is built from — in this order.

Rounds 3–7

- 03 Setting Your Goals
- 04 Backing Yourself
- 05 Using Your Corner
- 06 Retraining Your Mind
- 07 The Power of Exercise

The Comeback Kid

Setting Your Goals

"If you don't have a clear goal in life, a well-planned target to pursue, you'll sink."

KEY MOMENTS

Lose 180 pounds. Back from his breakdown, Tyson sets one giant goal and breaks it into 10-pound milestones — each one earning a reward like a meal or a day out. Tedious days suddenly have meaning.

Wilder 2: win by knockout. Because the first fight was a draw and points decisions in the U.S. are unreliable, his goal for the rematch becomes specific: KO. Every sub-goal — coach, weight, aggression — is built backwards from that.

The Goal Ring. Draw a square boxing ring; ultimate goal in the centre, four mini-goals at the corners, dates added for each. A method he uses to keep the big and small in one frame.

GROW from the 1980s. Goal, Reality, Obstacles, Way forward — a four-letter coaching acronym he leans on so plans don't stay vague. Every Hollywood pitch is one sentence. Every life goal should be too.

THE LESSON

We're happiest when we're moving toward something bigger than ourselves. Make the goal specific, break it into measurable chunks, and reward yourself at each checkpoint.

FOUR TAKEAWAYS

1. State your goal as one personal sentence — "I, [your name], will..."
2. Break it into measurable mini-goals you can tick off in order.
3. Pace yourself: baby steps prevent long-term damage.
4. Reward each milestone — momentum is the secret currency of comebacks.

Back Yourself, Even When Others Don't

Self-Belief and Banishing Self-Doubt

"Make sure your enemy doesn't live between your own two ears."

KEY MOMENTS

The Louisville Lip. Watch early Cassius Clay and the first thing you see isn't footwork — it's the force of his conviction. Belief, broadcast loud enough, becomes prophecy.

Rumble in the Jungle, 1974. After round one with Foreman, Ali's face flickers through fear and lands on self-mastery. Rope-a-dope works because Ali's belief outlasts Foreman's fists.

Laird Hamilton's 80-foot wall. The big-wave surfer who looked down a vertical wall of water and rode it: if you're going to face the impossible, you'd better believe you can do it, even if no one else does.

Manny Steward's prophecy. Ten years ago, in Klitschko's own camp, Manny pointed at Tyson and called him the natural heir to the heavyweight throne. Manny is gone; that one sentence still carries Tyson.

THE LESSON

Self-belief is what executes the strategy. Without it, the best plan in the world stays on the page.

FOUR TAKEAWAYS

1. Write down six "big waves" you've already ridden — proof on paper of what you're capable of.
2. Stop being your own critic; start being your own coach.
3. Hold on to the people who said "I believe in you" — keep their voice alive.
4. Fear and self-doubt are the lapdogs of failure. Don't feed them.

Use Your Corner

Asking for Help and Building a Support Network

"It is a strong person, not a weak one, who reaches out for the help of others."

KEY MOMENTS

Paris, Dad and Dave. When the bottom fell out, his wife Paris, his father John, and his friend Dave Ray dropped everything to keep him balanced — corner men in the truest sense.

Sharing with Ben. Former trainer Ben Davison opened up about his own struggles. Hearing it from someone else loosened the demon's grip on Tyson.

The slyness of depression. It waits in the shadows for you to be alone, then sets to work. A trusted network is what stops the lid bursting before you notice it's under pressure.

The 4 a.m. knock. December 2019, a young man knocks before dawn, suicidal. Tyson takes him on a three-mile run, talks him through it, points him to professional help — and bumps into him on the beach later, doing better.

THE LESSON

Asking for help isn't weakness — it's the move that keeps the worst from happening. Build a corner before you need it.

FOUR TAKEAWAYS

1. Acceptance comes first; help comes second.
2. Pick people who can be honest with you, not lackeys.
3. Talk openly with others who are also fighting — shared darkness shrinks.
4. If you're thinking about ending it, call a professional helpline tonight, not tomorrow.

Retrain Your Mind and Mental Health

Mood, Mindfulness and Gratitude

“Our body is ruled by our mind. It dictates our happiness, the way we perceive others, our fear levels — everything.”

KEY MOMENTS

Three brains for the price of one. Between 70,000 and 100,000 thoughts pass through your head each day; most are autopilot. Knowing the brain takes vacations is the first step to running it.

Whoop five times. When his mood dips, Tyson jumps about and shouts “whoop” five times. Try shouting it without smiling — you can’t. Pattern interrupt as mental medicine.

The water-skier. Mindfulness as a rope behind a boat: if your thoughts are dragging you somewhere ugly, let go of the rope and aim the boat elsewhere.

The Wilder 1 spiral. Stripped of the IBF title days after Klitschko, then a broken ankle, then deeper depression. He learned the hard way: what you focus on multiplies.

THE LESSON

You have far more control over your thoughts than you realise — but only if you train the muscle. Catch the autopilot, redirect, and replace.

FOUR TAKEAWAYS

1. Practice gratitude daily; it crowds out the dog of fear.
2. Use a pattern interrupt (whoop, walk, splash water) the moment a spiral starts.
3. Forgive yourself for the past — the burden you put down is your own.
4. Be your own coach, not your own critic; tomorrow you’ll be back on track.

The Power of Exercise

For Boxing and For Life

"We were born to run, swim and fight — not to be inactive or cooped up."

KEY MOMENTS

The COVID routine. Lockdown morning: 7:30 alarm, 9:00 circuit with Paris, 11:00 four-mile run, 2:30 weights, evening 10-mile bike or 5-mile run. Routine as scaffolding for sanity.

Old Baldyhead's Vegas workout. Christian Blacklock's pulse-racer-then-explosive routine: bench presses, clap press-ups, Tabata. The body Tyson took into Wilder 2 was built here.

Cortisol vs. cardio. Cardio combats the stress hormone that keeps depression alive. A strong heart pulls oxygen, burns fat, and clears whatever problem you went out the door with.

The early-bird champ. Mon–Sat: cardio morning and evening. Look around any office at 9 a.m. and you can spot who already moved — they're the ones with colour in their cheeks.

THE LESSON

Movement is medicine. The serotonin, endorphins and dopamine your body pays you for a workout are exactly what depression has been stealing.

FOUR TAKEAWAYS

1. Have a routine — happy people have predictable scaffolding.
2. Hydrate regularly; thirst masquerades as hunger.
3. Take it one day at a time; consistency beats intensity over a year.
4. If you can move outside, move outside — the open horizon is good for the soul.

MOVEMENT THREE

BECOME

Execution, sacrifice, identity, and what comes after the bell.

Weight, camp, distractions, alter ego, the final round. Once the foundation is laid, becoming the champion is the discipline of doing the small things, every day.

Rounds 8–12

08 Making Weight

09 Training Camp

10 Blocking Out Distractions

11 Building Your Alter Ego

12 Moving Forward

Making Weight

Finding Your Perfect Size

“Losing weight is never a quick fix — it’s a lifestyle change.”

KEY MOMENTS

Marbella, early 2018. 25 stone going in. Seven weeks of keto: bacon, cheese, eggs and mayo for breakfast; half a roast chicken for lunch; two bun-less burgers for dinner. Three workouts a day. He runs up La Concha — six miles up — for the first time in his life.

The 28-stone walk. Day one of his comeback he’s too heavy to run, so he walks. Then sees Wilder’s Instagram post calling him finished. That post was the spark that lit the rocket.

The 30-pounds-in-two-days trap. Boxers in lower divisions sometimes drop 30 pounds in 48 hours — sweatsuits on treadmills, bike in saunas. Dangerous, lost electrolytes, hearts at risk. The heavyweight division spared him that madness.

180 pounds gone. Six months out from Wilder 1 he set the target. He hit it by breaking it into 10-pound pieces and rewarding each one.

THE LESSON

Your “fighting weight” isn’t a photo-shoot stunt — it’s a sustainable size you can defend with your habits, not your willpower.

FOUR TAKEAWAYS

1. Treat weight loss as a lifestyle change, not a deadline.
2. Build the change around food rules, not food fights.
3. Reward yourself in non-food ways at every milestone.
4. Don’t crash-cut — sweat isn’t just water, and your heart pays the bill.

Training Camp

Sacrifice, Preparation, Ritual

“Suffer now and live the rest of your life as a champion.” — Muhammad Ali

KEY MOMENTS

The Wilder 2 team. Sugar Hill Steward, Andy Lee, George Lockhart, Christian Blacklock, Isaac Lowe, Timothy Allcock, Shane and Hughie Fury — every role hand-picked, no entourage, no lackeys.

The fake limp. After one sparring session he pretends to favour a leg, just to see what leaks. Sure enough, “injury rumours” spread. Bonus mind-game material for Wilder.

We Are Sparta. Borrowed from the film 300 (a bit daft, he admits), the chant is the team’s ritual before every fight — adrenaline, smiles, and the comfort of doing what they’ve always done.

Heavy bag off its hook. To make his punches concussive, Tyson hits the heavy bag so hard it comes off the hook every day. Power Prepare Overcome Win Every Round Ritual — Sugar Hill’s acronym in five words.

THE LESSON

Camps work because preparation, the right team, and ritual remove every excuse the day of the test. Sacrifice now buys composure later.

FOUR TAKEAWAYS

1. Choose your camp by goal, then design backwards: people, plan, place.
2. Surround yourself only with positive, hand-picked talent.
3. Sleep is part of the work, not the reward.
4. Build a small ritual that signals “go time” — and use it every time.

Distractions

How to Block Out the Haters

“Make sure your enemy doesn’t live between your own two ears.”

KEY MOMENTS

Arnie’s no-Plan-B. Schwarzenegger said a Plan B drains energy from Plan A. Arnie was once mocked for his accent and body. Cameron put him in The Terminator because of those exact things.

Ali’s painted boulders. On the road he ran up at Deer Lake, he wrote the names of his greatest opponents on the rocks — fuel for self-belief on every climb.

Turn off the news. Holiday with no signal: nothing happens. The world keeps turning. The 24-hour drip of bad news is background noise that quietly becomes anxiety.

Insinuating friends. The “Are you sure that’ll work?” doubters who chip away in the form of leading questions. The doubt is theirs, not yours.

THE LESSON

Distractions and doubters are unavoidable. Your job is to control the perimeter — what you let in, who you give weight to, and what you choose not to fight.

FOUR TAKEAWAYS

1. Don’t take naysayers personally — their problem isn’t your problem.
2. Reduce screen time and consume news in measured doses.
3. Have no Plan B for the thing you most want to do.
4. Compassion for haters works better than rage — and burns less fuel.

Building Your Own Alter Ego

Channeling Your Heroes

"The Gypsy King is fearless, cocky, loud and showy. The real me makes a nice cup of tea and plays with the dog."

KEY MOMENTS

The Gypsy King at age 10. A shy, awkward, lanky kid in the corner of his dad's gym, eating a McDonald's, then up shadow-boxing. Descended from two undefeated Gypsy Kings — boxing royalty, by birthright.

Churchill's hats. Top hats, bowlers — different headwear for different rooms, different versions of himself for different fights. A trick Tyson uses too.

Alexander modelling Achilles. By 30 he had conquered a quarter of the world, with Achilles' motto over his tent: be the best, far above all others. Caesar then modelled himself on Alexander. Heroes are nesting dolls.

Marvelous Marvin and the monster. Hagler said he had a monster inside him that screamed in training. Hearns spoke about "the Hitman" in third person. Aliases that turn fear into fuel.

THE LESSON

An alter ego isn't fakery — it's a custom-built version of you with the traits you're missing for a specific arena. Switch it on; switch it off when you're home.

FOUR TAKEAWAYS

1. Decide what trait your alter ego owns that you don't — and name it.
2. Pick a trigger — a piece of clothing, a song, a chant — to switch it on.
3. Don't live in character; the showman goes home, the real you stays.
4. If the first alter ego doesn't click, design another one.

Moving Forward

The Final Round and Life After the Bell

“Be willing to go the distance — and you’ll be pleasantly surprised when you don’t have to.”

KEY MOMENTS

Wilder 2, the seventh round. Sugar Hill says, “Don’t get cocky.” Wilder is as weak as a kitten. The towel flies through the air and the Bronze Bomber falls. American Pie at karaoke. Bob Arum, in his eighties, sings along.

The old gym in Lancaster. Tyson goes back to where he first danced under the lights. Nothing much has changed. The boy is in the ring; the man remembers why.

The Tyson Fury Foundation. Beyond grass-roots sport, he’s opening doors for young offenders coming out of jail — and dreams of building training camps in Morecambe.

Ali at the end. Asked why people now loved him after years of being public enemy number one, Ali raised his shaking hand: “It’s because I’m more human now.” The greatest, in the end, was the most himself.

THE LESSON

After the bell, the temptation is to ask “what now?” The answer is to stay present — let today be the prize, not the next bigger fight.

FOUR TAKEAWAYS

1. Stay rooted in the present after a win — that’s when most champions drift.
2. Keep moving forward; the rolling stone gathers no moss.
3. Use whatever stage you’ve earned to give something back.
4. Your humanity, not your titles, is what people remember at the end.

PART II

The Action Guide

Recover · Rebuild · Reign

The same twelve rounds, reorganised by the moment in your life when you'll need them. Recover when you're on the floor. Rebuild when you've decided to get back in. Reign when the fight is on you and the only job left is to do the small things perfectly.

RECOVER

When you're on the floor.

First moves when life has knocked you flat — addiction, depression, burnout, divorce, loss. Before goals, before plans, do these.

01. Admit it out loud, today.

Tell one person you trust — partner, parent, friend, GP. Don't edit it down. Naming the problem is the first punch you throw on the way back. Tyson's came on his knees in his underpants on Halloween night.

02. Find a professional this week.

Therapist, GP, helpline, addiction counsellor. You wouldn't set your own broken arm; don't set your own mental health. Make the appointment before you're sure you're ready.

03. Move your environment, not just your mind.

Change rooms, change houses, change cities if you have to. Tyson moved his caravan to his dad's land in Style. The haunted theme park doesn't have to be your address.

04. Build a perimeter against negativity.

Mute the news, drop the friends who feed the spiral, leave social platforms that hurt you. Don't debate it — just close the door.

05. Pick two lifelines and use them daily.

Hope: name one thing you're looking forward to. Gratitude: name three things from today. Out loud or on paper, every single morning.

06. Move the body, even badly.

If you're too heavy to run, walk. If you can't walk, stretch. The chemistry doesn't care how stylish you are — it just needs you upright and breathing harder.

REBUILD

When you've decided to get back in.

Once you're standing, the work begins. These are the moves that turn a decision into a comeback you can bank on.

01. Write your one-sentence goal.

Personal, specific, time-bound. "I, [your name], will [verb + measurable outcome] by [date]." Tape it where you see it every morning. Tyson's was: lose 180 pounds.

02. Break it into 10% chunks with rewards.

Don't set a 180-pound mountain. Set 18 ten-pound steps and reward each one. Momentum is the secret currency of comebacks.

03. Hand-pick your corner.

Three to five people, max — only those who can be honest, who pull in the same direction, and who answer the phone at 4 a.m. Sugar Hill, Andy, Christian, George. No lackeys, no entourage.

04. Build your routine and let it become you.

Wake same time, train same time, eat same way most days. Forty percent of what you do is automatic — make sure the automatic stuff is doing your goals for you.

05. Recall six big waves you've already ridden.

Write them down. Read them on the bad days. The point of a list of past wins isn't pride — it's evidence that the voice saying you can't is lying.

06. Train one mental pattern interrupt.

Pick yours: shout "whoop" five times, splash cold water, go outside for sixty seconds. Use it the second the spiral starts, not after it's won.

07. Forgive yourself for last year.

Apologise to the people you let down. Then drop the burden you keep carrying about yourself. Comebacks need both hands free.

When the fight is on you.

Camp mode. The phase where you eliminate distractions, sharpen the tool, and become the version of yourself the moment requires.

01. Cut the entourage to the essentials.

Anyone who isn't making you sharper is making you slower. Tyson's Wilder 2 inner circle was eight people. Audit yours and apologise to no one for the cuts.

02. Build your alter ego on purpose.

List the traits you don't have but the moment requires. Name the version of you who has them. Pick a trigger — song, garment, chant — that switches it on, and another that switches it off when you go home.

03. Engineer one ritual you trust.

Tyson's team huddles up and shouts "We Are Sparta." Yours can be smaller — a prayer, a stretch, a phrase you say in the mirror. Same one, every time. It's the safety blanket that doesn't look like one.

04. Have no Plan B.

Plan B drains Plan A. Don't shop for safety nets — they tell your subconscious you expect to fall. Decide, commit, and burn the boats behind you.

05. Block out distractions on a schedule.

Put it on the calendar: phone in another room from 8–11 a.m., no news after dinner, social media weekends only. Discipline what gets your attention or someone else will.

06. Sleep like it's part of the work.

It is. Your body repairs and your brain files what you trained. Cheat sleep and you cheat the camp. Bed early, phone down, room dark.

07. Use the stage to give something back.

When you do come through, find someone earlier in the fight than you and put your hand out. The Tyson Fury Foundation started after a stranger knocked on the door before dawn. Yours can be smaller and still matter.

QUICK REFERENCE

Twelve Principles

One line per round. Print this page and pin it where you'll see it.

- 01 Two lifelines exist at the bottom: hope and gratitude.
- 02 Resilience is the habit of treating storms as teachers.
- 03 Without a clear goal, you sink — write the one sentence.
- 04 Don't let your enemy live between your own two ears.
- 05 Asking for help is the move that keeps the worst from happening.
- 06 Catch the autopilot, redirect, replace — gratitude is medicine.
- 07 Movement is the prescription depression doesn't want you to fill.
- 08 Your fighting weight is sustainable habits, not willpower stunts.
- 09 Camps work because preparation removes excuses on the day.
- 10 Doubters' doubts are theirs — control the perimeter, not them.
- 11 Switch on a built-on-purpose self for the moment that needs it.
- 12 After the bell, stay present — today is the prize, not next time.

"Train hard, fight easy."